PREVENTION

Understand what animal cruelty is and how to recognize animal abuse and neglect.

- Definition: Animal cruelty is deliberate abuse or simply the failure to take care of an animal. Intentional cruelty can range from failing to adequately provide an animal with food, water, shelter, socialization or veterinary care to torturing, maiming, mutilating or killing an animal.
- Signs: Pets with an open sore, wound, injury, and/or illness that is not being treated, pets covered in ticks, fleas, and/or other parasites, pets left in unsanitary environments and/or left outside in inclement weather without adequate shelter, pets left in kennels or cages that are small to stand, turn, or make normal movements, and any other act intended to cause harm to a pet resulting in abuse and/or neglect.

CONVERSATION

Having ongoing conversations with your student(s) and loved ones about animal cruelty is critical in raising awareness. Not only should our loved ones know how they can keep their pets safe, but knowing how to stay safe around other animals and what to do if animal cruelty is spotted, is crucial.

Ask your student:

- Is it okay to pet someone else's pet without asking? No, because the owner may want to give directions before allowing you to pet them.
- What can you do if you notice other students intentionally harming an animal for fun? Tell a trusted adult and/or report it to the appropriate authorities.
- What should you do if a dog tries to attack you? Lie still and quietly with your knees to your chest and your hands over the ears.

Ask yourself:

- Are my pet's vaccines and rabies tag current?
- Is my pet well trained to be around children?
- If my pet is outside, are they able to reach their food and water?
